hither and thither in search of some sort of deadly weapon.

An announcement was made by General Manager Walter Douglas of the Copper Queen and the E. P & S. W. Railroad that he would issue transportation to 200 men, the number asked for by Colonel Greene in his call for aid.

Promptly 100 armed men and another 100 unarmed men had signed the roll, the roll that will go down in Bisbee's history and the history of the Arizona border section, as the valiant 200.

The scene that followed the first coming of the news has never been equalled in Bisbee. Fully 2000 pople were huddled on the plaza, excitedly discussing the news and anxiously awaiting the latest details from the scene of terror.

Then the bulletins began to come in fast and furious. First came the news that forty American residents of Cananea had been killed, among them George Metcalf.

The news that American Consul Galbraith had wired to Fort Huachuca that his life and the lives of all Americans were in jeopardy and that immediate assistance must be sent or all would be killed, sent a shudder of horror through the crowd. There were cries from the impatient that a train be secured at once. A train could not be started, said Manager Walter Douglas, until midnight.

Already, men drunk with excitement were beginning to show the effects of drink.

Mayor Caven issued an edict that all saloons be closed and this was promptly done. Not a drop of liquor was sold in Bisbee from 7 o'clock until after the midnight train had pulled out of the railroad yards, when the saloons were again opened.

Marshal Snodgrass followed up the action of Mayor Caven by issuing an order that all men remaining in Bisbee after the departure of the relief train disarm and remain unarmed under penalty of arrest and imprisonment. Twelve deputies were pressed into service to insure the carrying out of the Marshal's orders to the letter.

It was a square-jawed, determined set of men who watched for the latest news from the scene of strife and carnage. Men in service begged persistently to be allowed to leave their employment that they might go to the aid of their countrymen in distress. It was the same spirit that dominated our forefathers when they answered the call to arms in revolutionary days, that went to the front at a moment's notice when the news that Sumter had been fired on.

It was a minute-men sort of gathering of men who presented themselves for enrollment. There were carbines, shotguns, small bore rifles and the more dangerous and effective models of the latest design. It was a businesslike looking company.

Tom Rynning, chosen naturally as the leader of the posse, throughout showed his mastery of the situation. He mustered his men in front of the general offices. He instructed them in a rudimentary way, and that was about all that was necessary. They were there to fight if called upon. In any event they were there to look after their friends in distress, and the only feeling that pervaded that noble body was one of chafing at the delay which kept them from the scene of the real fighting and trouble. For they were led to believe that there was real fighting, andthat blood was flowing in the streets of the sister copper camp across the line.

Begging for a gun was a young fellow, a stranger in Bisbee, who said: "I've got nine bullets in my system somewhere that I got in a nigger riot. I wouldn't mind now if I got another Mexican one in a cause as good as this. Say, mister, can't you somehow put me onto a gun?" The next seen of the young chap, who could not have been much more than just out of his minority, he was all smiles. "I've got one," he said. "A fellow I never saw before gave it to me, and I've got my name down for that trip, too." And he looked as happy as a small boy with a pair of new skates.

ing of over 500 of those who had been left behind.

Sweethearts were there to bid adieu to the boys they feared might not come back. Wives bravely admonished their husbands to use discretion, but all seeemed resigned that the posse should and must go in answer to the call of their countrymen in distress under a stranger's flag.

Immediately after pulling out of the depot yards, it was the intention of those in charge to call a meeting and elect officers of the posse, that more effective fighting might be done if any came up.

WILD RUMORS AFLOAT IN BORDER TOWN.

(Special to Review.)

NACO, June 1.—All sorts of wild rumors were afloat in Naco. One rumor was that the strikers had a large amount of dynamite in their possession and threatened to blow up the town. Colonel Greene made a speech to them this morning which did not appease them, but on the contrary they threatened if he did not leave the town to run him out. Greene is still at Cananea. Did not come with his family. It was rumored that the American consul wired to friends that he was in danger. Telephonic and telegraphic connection has been intercepted.

CANANEA CONSOLIDATED EMPLOYEES HEAVILY ARMED

(Special to Review.)

NACO, June 1.—All employees of the Cananea Consolidated are armed to the teeth, and serious trouble is expected. Governor Ysabal will go through here tonight from Hermosillo, with fifty soldiers. General Kosterlitzky is on his way to Cananea from Magdalena with eighty-five men. An armed posse of three hundred men is en route from Bisbee, and although permission to cross the frontier has not yet been granted, if necessary such force will be used as the situation demands.

Colonel Greene's family has just arrived on a special train from Cananea and are safe. All employees of the store are safe, including all lady employees.

REFUGEES COME

They Bring the First Authentic News of Terrorstricken Cananea.

REPORTS OF DEAD ARE UNDERESTIMATED

Eye Witnesses to the Horrible Conditions That Prevailed There Tell of Murder and Wholesale Pillage.

News of importance ceased to reach Bisbee about 9 o'clock. It had all been told over and over of how Americans had been shot down in cold blood in the streets of Cananea, the immense throng that crowded the space in front of the bulletin boards had partially dispersed or stood about in small groups discussing the situation; the volunteer posse had arranged all its plans and was waiting for its train to leave. Then came word that a special train bringing refugees from the stricken town across the border was on its way to Bisbee.

It reached the city about 11 o'clock last night, and its three coaches contained the families of Cananea's American population, all eyewitnesses to the horrible doings of the day there.

Bisbee had been led to believe that forty Americans had been killed in the many fights that took place; the refugees asserted that instead of forty dead, there were more nearly seventy-five, and only six of that number from among the Mexican mob.

Then for the first time Bisbee heard from those who witnessed the frightful happenings of how the black horde of Mexicans, with the natural stealth of their race, gathered slowly, first in small numbers, then increasing until their numbers reached those of a mob; how they swarmed through the streets of Ronquillo, sending up loud shouts with the bravado which characterizes them when they are aware that theirs is the upper hand. They swarmed upon the Mesa, at every house and every place of business, gathering more strength by forcing into their midst their fellow countrymen—their "paisanos"—until they numbered full 2000. Then it was that they began their murder and pillage in earnest. Knowing that they must of necessity crush any body of men that could be opposed to them by their strength of numbers they gathered in courage—or in cowardice, as you will.

Those among the more peaceably-inclined Mexican workmen who did not care to take part in the demonstration they forced to join their ranks under threat of torture and death.

"Viva, Mexico!" and "Down with the dirty Americans!" were their pet battle cries, and they rung out over the hills and vales of the Cananeas with a gusto that cheered their hot blood into a murderous heat.

On their way they were met by a party of men in five automobiles, all armed to the teeth and determined to stop if possible the onward march of that black, threatening mob. The mob was ordered to halt. They disobeyed and the first skirmish of the day was on. Two Mexicans fell under the first fire and for a time they were scattered in dismay. But they knew that their strength must win for them, and again they came. This time they were not met with any further resistance.

On they marched, gathering numbers with every few rods of advance. A laborer working here and another there were rushed into service, and the leaders of the bloodthirsty mob began to harangue their followers, beseeching them to repair to their homes and return armed to a common meeting place, there to prepare for a general devastation of the entire community and the utter annihilation of all "Americanos."

They came upon the lumber yard of the Metcalf brothers, storming it in the endeavor to add more men to their ranks. They were met by George Metcalf, who vainly strived to resent their advance. He was shot down in cold blood. His brother, Will Metcalf, coming to the assistance of his brother, now cold in death, fell by a Mexican bullet. Two hosemen who turned water on them in the hope that their advance might be checked, met a similar fate, one of them going down with a crushed skull. He was literally beaten to death.

It is told by one of the refugees who witnessed the occurrence that an American happened to be in the path of the mob when he was set upon by a number of Mexicans, who chose, rather than shoot him down mercifully, to beat him to death with rocks, picked up from the roadway. It was a grewsome sight.

The special train which arrived in Bisbee last night brought, among others, Eugene Brown, a plasterer contractor, who was working on a contract for Metcalf brothers. Brown's story is a graphic one of the day's occurrences.

"The Mexicans had been forming all day long. Two thousand strong they came up on the Mesa at 3 o'clock, forcing every Mexican workman they met in their path to fall in with them. They took my laborers away so quickly that I had scarcely time to realize what had happened. How they happened to leave me unmolested is more than I can understand. I guess they must have been looking for bigger game.

"I saw five autos with men armed to the teeth stop the mob, but the latter refused to halt for them. The men in the autos fired on the mob, killing two of them.

"Then the mob came right up to Metcalf's yard. George Metcalf rushed out with a gun, I heard—I didn't see that myself—and he was shot down before he could do a thing. Will Metcalf, his brother, met a similar fate within a few feet of his dead brother.

"The mob then set fire to the lumber yard, destroying it. That was the only fire that I saw up to the time we left at 7:20 o'clock.

"All the mob were not armed, but many of them were. I do not think they were quite ready for real trouble. They seemed to be getting their men together to prepare for a battle. Their leaders were making speeches, telling the men to go home and get their guns and meet again at the court house. From the mob arose cries of "Viva Mexicano," and curses and imprecations were called down on the head of the Americans. It looked mighty bad, I can tell you.

"I understand that the men demanded 5 pesos ($5) a day pay and eight hours' work. This being refused them, a speech made by Colonel Greene did not have any quieting effect on them, so the mob was gathered. At least that is my understanding of it.

"Yes, Greene made a speech from the steps of the store, I think, but it only seemed to make the Mexicans worse. There were some threats made and then Greene went to his house.

"I saw several of the Mexican officials going back and forth from the Greene residence, but we did not hear what they were doing.

"The report that telegraphic and telephonic communications between Cananea and Naco had been terminated may be true. I would not be surprised if the fire at the Metcalf lumber yard burned through the wires. It was a hot fire and the wires pass close to the yard.

"I saw one white man clubbed to death with stones. He was given no chance for his life, and so far as I could see did not molest any one. It was simply cold-blooded murder.

"The family of John Campbell came up on the train, as well as many others whom I do not know."

From a lady who, to use her own expression, was so frightened that she entirely forgot her name, the safe arrival of the John Campbell family was also learned.

This lady lived at the Star lodging house on the Mesa, near the Metcalf lumber yard, and further corroborates the rumor that fully seventy-five met death in the riot following the strike.

She also reports that the line men were working hard with the wires at the time of her departure. Lights were still burning in the city, so it is presumed that the electric system remained in good shape up to that time.

Several of the refugees came without any other belongings than those which they wore and many who have friends or acquaintances in Bisbee started out at once to reach places where they might get accommodations for the rest of the night.

All were of the opinion that reports which had reached here could not have bee nexaggerated in the least. Conditions, they say, were indescribable.

Rev. Harvey M. Shields, as chaplain of the Rangers, was among those who left with the posse.

Officers Jack White, Biddy Doyle and Frank Johnson, all heavily armed with rifles, made up the contingent from Bisbee's police force.

Dr. Diver volunteered his services as surgeon.

PAR VALUE $1 EACH

The property of this compang consists of 251 1-4 pertenencias, or about 620 acres of mineral ground, situated in the Ajo Mountains, Sonora, Mexico, about 40 miles south of Bisbee, and about 36 miles a little north of east from Cananea.

This property has been very favorably reported upon by a number of mining experts, who have stated that it has every indication of developing into a large and paying mine, in fact, another Bisbee or Cananea.

The company at present is actively engaged in opening up the property, which from the work already done, shows the ledge to be unusually wide, and about one mile in length. From assays made of ore taken from the surface workings, values as high as 22 1-2 per cent. copper were obtained, with good values in gold and silver.

In order to raise sufficient funds to carry on the development work on a large scale, this company is now offering stock for sale at par, in four installment payments, at interest of three months each, or for cash in full as preferred.

This stock is now for sale by G. O Schaefer, Secretary and Treasurer of the company, at the office of Judge H. J. Brown, Main Street, Bisbee, Arizona.
